Media Production and Cultural Studies in South Korea

TREM 3841: Multimedia Design and Production (3 credits)

Tentative Dates: July 10, 2024 – July 31, 2024 (Summer Session II)

The Media Production in South Korea program will provide students with the opportunity to on a great range of production techniques and tools of the medium, including electronic media production theory, shooting on-location, graphics, audio and post-production. Students will not only explore the diversity of South Korea, but also be able to document and create a story of their personal experience there.

Dongguk University, located in the heart of Seoul, will provide an ideal setting for studying media production and cultural studies within a South Korean environment. Participants will work collaboratively with Dongguk University students on the pre-production, production, and post-production of short video projects. Students will also take a work streetwise course on Korean language and culture that will facilitate their understanding of traditional culture while they are shooting.

The first week of the course will focus on an introduction to pre-production and production. During the second week, participants will shoot on-location in different parts of Seoul. In the third week, students will learn and apply the post-production process to their product. Additionally, we will visit popular Korean TV networks and experience live concerts. Additionally, the group will get a chance to visit the city of Busan.

Housing will be at Dongguk University on-campus residence hall. This program is open to undergraduate and graduate students from all majors.

Fee: $2095 includes Housing, insurance, some meals, and course related activities and excursions / Not Included: Tuition, Flight, and Pers. expenses.
